Ten 1st class stamps featuring unusual and amusing photographs of cats and dogs will go on sale at post offices, the British Philatelic Bureau and philatelic outlets on 13 February. The stamps will be printed on a self-adhesive laminate which incorporates a moisture soluble gum layer between the face paper and adhesive. The stamps can be peeled from the laminate. The stamps are arranged in two rows of five, and the sheetlet rouletted between columns 2/3 and 4/5 for ease of folding by the user. The stamps are aimed at senders of social mail, similarly to the greetings stamp issues of 1989-97.

The stamps will also be available in a special retail book containing the 10 Cats & Dogs stamps and two 1st class definitives, all self-adhesive. This book, printed by Walsall Security Printers, will be available from the Bureau, philatelic outlets and selected retail outlets, price £3.24.

The stamps are designed by Johnson Banks, using photographs by Magnum Photos: three dogs and two cats above, and three cats and two dogs below. The dogs are by Elliott Erwitt; the cats are by (top, from left) Richard Kalvar and Ferdinand Scianna, and (bottom, from left) Martine Franck, Henri Cartier-Bresson and Jean Gaumy. The Queen's silhouette and the 1st indicator are printed in silver ink.

Details of sponsored handstamps for 13 February will be announced in the British Postmark Bulletin, available on subscription from the Bureau (£10 UK/Europe; £21.75 elsewhere). For a sample copy, write to The Editor, British Postmark Bulletin, Royal Mail, 2-14 Bunhill Row, London EC1Y 8HQ.

Although dogs and cats are very different, they share one important feature: they are the only animals on which we have bestowed the full freedom of our homes.

We keep many other companion creatures – birds in aviaries, hamsters in cages, fish in tanks and rabbits in hutches – yet they aren't allowed the free run of our houses or apartments. So why have cats and dogs been elevated to the unique position of our house-mates?

Part of the answer lies in the long history of domestication. Back in the Stone Age, human hunters set about taming the wild wolf – their competitor – into the domestic dog that would become their guardian and hunting companion.

The differences between wolf and dog DNA show that it has taken 135,000 years for the wolf to evolve into all modern dog breeds.

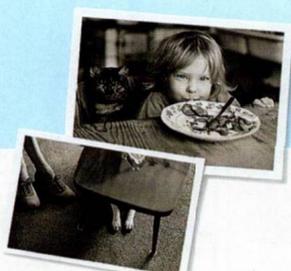

Wolves are highly sociable and learn to be subservient to dominant pack members.

Similarly, once a dog is tamed, it transfers all its emotional attachment to its human companions. It treats them as if they are rather strange-looking wolves and is quickly prepared to follow its human 'pack' leader. The behaviour of wolves has not merely been retained in modern dogs. It has been exaggerated in the different breeds.

Those that are best suited to being indoor pets are the ones that have been selectively bred to become the most 'juvenile'. The lap and toy dogs

Dogs come in many shapes and sizes, but cats are far closer to their wild origins – the North African wild cat. The vast grain stores of ancient Egypt were overrun by rats and mice, which attracted the local wild cats. Before long, these valuable pest controllers were cared for and, indeed, protected by humans. To kill a cat was punishable by death.

In personality the cat differs significantly from the dog: it isn't a pack animal. The dog sees its human companions as pseudo-parents and pack leaders to be protected and obeyed. The cat also sees its human companions as pseudo-parents, but beyond that they are merely a useful source of food and shelter. The dog is a slavish follower; the cat is more self-centred. As a result of these differences, it has been said that cat-people and

A well-illustrated presentation pack (left, price £3.05) and stamp cards (price 25p each) will be available at main post offices and philatelic outlets. The pack has been written by well-known writer and broadcaster Dr Desmond Morris.
